Bosko Begovic

BARCELONA, SPAIN

Bosko Begovic is a writer, conceptual artist, and curator based in Barcelona, working across performance, movement, and text under the name Mark Fish. His practice is anchored in the idea of formalizing the nothing—giving form to what has no fixed identity. Movement is its ground: More than 25 years of teaching in Japanese movement disciplines—Aikido, Judo, and Tatami Ryu—now feed a research practice that treats the body as a site of inquiry rather than display.

Since 2020, he has collaborated with composer Amble Skuse on Interdependent Intersections, using MiMU gloves and sound to impede rather than accompany movement.

In 2012 he co-founded and directs Center424 and the Belgrade Artist in Residence program, and has since co-founded Virtual Studio Groups, the AIR Exchange Network, and Whatzart Lab. His writing appears in VSG Magazine, the community's publication.

Kai Rennes

STOCKHOLM, SWEDEN/SITGES, SPAIN

Kai Rennes is a multidisciplinary artist of Nordic origin living in Stockholm and Barcelona. He has studied art, architecture, history of art, philosophy, aesthetics and semantics. He works with several different media, from video to installations, objects, photo and painting. His work has been shown in many European countries, Mexico, Cuba and Japan.

His works are phenomenological notes on human knowledge in different manifestations: What kind of knowledge is science, art or religion? Some 20 years ago religions and spiritual life were regarded as part of the private sphere—especially in the western world; now they are in many ways back in focus.

Many religions are collections of practical knowledge, ethical principles, dogma, rites and deeper understanding of the human nature; wisdom from thousands of years back. New beliefs and religious structures are created, for instance, in the United States, Europe and Japan.

Art, with its transcendental nature, on the other hand, includes at its best a spirituality similar to a mystic or religious experience.

Sarah-Jane Mason

UK / SPAIN

Sarah-Jane Mason is a Creative Practitioner, Facilitator & Educator who specialises in using mixed media approaches to personal and participatory arts projects. She believes that creativity is the key that unlocks learning and that cultivational actions and experimentation are important elements of the creative process.

Sarah-Jane comes from a traditional Fine Art background. She studied for a BA (Hons) Fine Art at Liverpool John Moore's University (UK) and DipCipris (a postgraduate degree) in Fine Art at the Cyprus College of Art (Cyprus). Continuing her studies, she focused on creative education, completing a PGCE (Art & Design) at the University of Leeds (UK) and a Post-16 Teaching Certificate at Cyprus College of Art (Cyprus).

Sarah-Jane's personal practice uses mixed media approaches to encourage dialogue around uncomfortable but important topics, question societal norms and compare and contrast people's experiences of a particular space or place. Her work often includes elements of mass media or found natural objects, questioning the impact these sources and resources have on our worldviews and everyday lives. Humour and colour are also of great importance to her work, bringing warmth and openness to encourage dialogue and collaborative working practices.

Recently, development has begun on The Lacuna Studios, an artist residency on an ecologically regenerative olive grove in southern Spain. Notions of care, creation, destruction, cultivation, experimentation and production are some of the foundational principles. This residency project has grown out of Lacuna Festivals, an international, contemporary art festival. Her role as co-director is an important aspect of her arts practice and provides an opportunity to create and hold a space where artists and audience members can interact, question, share and otherwise meaningfully engage with each other. She is supported in her work for Lacuna Festivals and The Lacuna Studios by co-director and land artist Simon Turner.

As part of her work for lifelong learning focused on creative education, Sarah-Jane plans and delivers participatory arts projects, often aimed at those for who there may be significant barriers to engagement. In addition, Sarah-Jane runs a publishing company, Next Generation Publications, that publishes visual books created by and for their audience. She was worked with children and young people, teachers and artists to create and publish peer developed publications. Past books are held in from his youth as ancient artifacts, using alternate history and mythology to explore the construction and distortion of historical narratives. Goode’s work has been exhibited internationally at institutions such as the Razliv Museum (Russia), Capellades Museum (Spain), Himalayas Museum (China), Monchskirchein Museum (Germany), and The Modern Art Museum of Fort Worth (USA). New technology interacts to a growing extent with our bodies and minds. Science, on the other hand, is often described as accumulative knowledge, growing organically. Natural sciences are sometimes described as a religion of our time.

There is a connection between the different fields of human knowledge. Sometimes the scientific world connects with different beliefs or contemporary art practices, sometimes religious symbols and practices reappear in a completely different context. The world shows us an endless network of meanings. Kai Rennes aims to ask questions about these networks. Sometimes these threads connect unexpected phenomena from different fields, eras and geographical origin.

The aim of the artist is to reinstate the experience of the spiritual and sacred as a part of the experience of visual art, without confessing any specific religion or belief.

Kübra Köprülüoğlu Aşanlı

TURKEY

Kübra Köprülüoğlu Aşanlı (b. 1984) is a contemporary artist based in Türkiye whose research-driven practice explores ecological relationships, indigenous knowledge systems, and regenerative futures. Working across painting, installation, video, and sound, she investigates how cultural memory and human–nature connections can be reimaged through contemporary art.

Through layered imagery, fragmented textures, organic forms, and bold colors, her work navigates the tension between visibility and erasure. Her visual language is defined by fluid transitions between forms, dissolving fixed boundaries and building compositions rooted in symbolic realism. By challenging extractive modes of representation, her practice repositions indigenous perspectives and non-human narratives as active agents rather than passive subjects.

Her multidisciplinary practice brings together artistic research, ecological thinking, and visual storytelling to explore alternative models of coexistence. Rather than treating identity, nature, and culture as separate subjects, she approaches them as interconnected systems shaped by memory, reciprocity, and continuous transformation.

Köprülüoğlu Aşanlı received her BFA in Graphic Design from Marmara University. She co-founded the ecological design studio HARMONIA in 2012 before focusing fully on her artistic practice in 2021. Her work has been exhibited internationally across South Korea, Japan, Greece, and North Macedonia. Her work has been recognized internationally, including being named a Top 10 Artist at the BIEAF World Artist Award (2024). She currently serves as a Steering Committee Member for the 23rd Busan International Environment Art Festival (2026).
